

Being a Jew

Paul N. Dion / Allen M. Dion

Being a Jew is not a crime
Despite living in wartime.
I am not a dog to be feared or hated.

I am only a man, one with hopes and dreams.
I'm not different. I don't stand out in a crowd.
A man with a family who wants to watch them live in peace.

They deserve nothing less. Don't you agree?
They want to end my life and the life of my wife, too.
It's all too much. When will it end?

Does anyone care about a man and his wife
And their children and the life they're trying to build?

My legacy hangs by a thread.
My future fills me with dread.
When all I ask is to celebrate my faith as I choose to.

Just another man with a dream. A dream of being free.
To just be me and be all I can be.
